RESCUED—THEN DIED

An unidentified man, about 60 years old, was taken from the river, near 18th street bridge, at 1 o'clock this afternoon. He was alive, but unconscious, when taken out. Died a few minutes after. Body removed to undertaking rooms at 1911 Canalport ave.

Man was about 5 feet 8 inches tall, 175 lbs. Grey mustache and beard. Wore dark suit. On finger of his left hand he had brass ring. The man had a cut over his left eye. Police investigating.

WHAT THE HEAT IS DOING

Fifteen persons are dead and over a hundred has been prostrated as a result of the severe heat of the last two days. More deaths, especially among the poor of the congested districts are certain, as there is no prospect of cooler weather or rain.

The county agent, besieged during the zero weather last winter by thousands clamoring for coal, was overwhelmed today by applications from poor families for ice. Babies and sick mothers are being aided by the United Charities.

Thousands, seeking relief from the heat, slept in city parks last night. Others slept on fire escapes.

Many women were overcome and fainted in the shopping district. Clerks in the stores were exhausted.

Dogs, driven mad by the heat, attacked children in all parts of the city. Several laborers working on buildings were overcome. One man fell four stories from a scaffold, but was merely scratched and bruised.

Following is a list of today's deaths from the heat:

Frank Hyde, seventy-four, 117 Fullerton ave.; heart disease made acute by the heat.

August Stockson, 64, 1619 McReynolds st., falls into areaway at 1521 North Paulina st. from sunstroke, breaking back.

Carl Bauer, 18 years old, 163 Gates ave., Brooklyn N. Y., cook on freight boat; drowned while seeking coolness in Calumet river at 111th st.; body at Leseberg's undertaking rooms, 10104 Avenue M.

Jacob Gilbhouse, 41 years old, 719 Liberty st.; died while sitting in a chair in his home, from heart disease superinduced by the heat.
